France-NATO: [The French may be preparing specific proposals for the reorganization of NATO and for dealing with the nuclear force problem in the Alliance.]

[Couve de Murville recently told NATO Secretary General Brosio that he considered "nuclear sharing in the Alliance" a priority problem which had to be faced. He said he would soon propose to De Gaulle means by which France could contribute to a solution. Couve also indicated that "changes" in NATO were necessary, and said he would suggest to De Gaulle that France make specific proposals for NATO reform in 1966 because "it would be unwise" to wait until 1969 to do so.]

[The hint at this time of French action on the Alliance's nuclear problem may be intended to discourage consideration of US and UK nuclear force proposals until Paris has been able to submit its own concept to the North Atlantic Council. De Gaulle may also now feel some pressure to arrive at definite proposals on European defense, because the French are insisting that any talks on European political union must embrace the defense question.]

[Any French nuclear proposal is likely to reflect a radically different approach from the two force plans now under discussion within the Alliance. French criticism of the NATO structure has not thus far contained any constructive proposals for its modification.]

*Kenya: Prime Minister Kenyatta has moved against his pro-Communist vice president, Oginga Odinga.

Oginga's cohorts are said to be demoralized, and leading leftists are being rounded up by the police. Other reports state that army units in Oginga's home area are being reinforced and have been alerted against any uprising by his Luo tribe.

These developments are a considerable victory for moderate elements in Kenya; they also represent a victory for Kikuyu tribal leaders who had sought to prevent Oginga from succeeding Kenyatta to the presidency.

South Korea: South Korean authorities foresee no immediate letup in student demonstrations against the government's policy for normalizing relations with Japan.

Students and police clashed again yesterday in Seoul, and larger demonstrations are threatened. Opposition politicians, hoping to use the students to pull down the government, have scheduled a mass rally for 17 April. The fifth anniversary of the 1960 student revolution that ousted former president Rhee falls on 19 April. The agitation therefore is likely to come to a head this week end.

Leftist students at the country's largest university meanwhile are plotting to gain control of the demonstrations. They are only a small minority, but they may be able to instill an anti-American note into the agitation.

Police believe that they can control the situation in Seoul if no more than 8-9,000 students demonstrate at one time. The government, otherwise, will have to call on the army and possibly declare martial law in the capital. There are about 7,000 troops in the immediate vicinity of Seoul.

President Pak has warned that his government will not be intimidated, and the minister of education states that the universities will be closed if necessary.

Mexico: The arrest of several key Mexican Communist Party leaders on 12 April apparently was intended as a warning that the Diaz Ordaz government will not tolerate agitation which threatens public order. Tightened police measures had been required because of Communist-organized student demonstrations protesting US action in Vietnam. The arrested leaders will probably be released soon; the government does not consider the Communist Party a serious threat.
